Zafris Background
Of Public Value

James G. Zafris, the Democratic party's nominee for Congress in the Sixth District, is one of those rare political lights that make an appearance only once in a political generation.

Zafris effectively combines true intellectuality with rugged, earthy, practicalism. He has run the gamut from tough contact sports to heady, overseas CIA assignments. His executive position with one of the biggest banks in the world gives a smoothness and polish hard to come by. A bachelor's degree in government from Dartmouth College; his master's degree in international affairs from Harvard University and attendance at Georgetown University School of Languages have got to give him an articulateness and insight into government affairs of such high public value as to make assessment difficult.

Voters this year have an opportunity to elect to public service a truly outstanding young man with a desire and the ability to represent all segments of our society. Regardless of regular party affiliation, elect Zafris, Democrat, to Congress.
